

GRIST FOR THE MILL

It's a spring and edible entrepreneurs are blossoming all over Brooklyn—imminent economic implosion be damned.

While we revere the boro's legendary legacies—like lox (p. 32) and the pizza guru who keep the city's best-read food blogger from moving to Manhattan (p. 24)—in this issue, folks who break new ground while breaking bread are breaking news. Here's what's hot off the sandwich presses:

Redheaded brothers mastermind chocolate (p. 10). A cutie rolls out a cookie company (p. 18). An Alaskan fisherman nets Brooklyn chefs to keep his craft afloat (p. 39). A writer leaves novels for knives (p. 52). Red Hook teens beat swords into ploughshares (p. 47). Bars boro-wide fling open and sling shots (p. 14 and 44). A new shop in Fort Greene thinks before you eat (p. 16). And both a private chef (p. 20) and a heat-and-serve hotspot (p. 9) set up shop to help busy moms eat food grown by our favorite entrepreneurs of all—local farmers (p. 64).

Speaking of new developments...yes the rumors are true, this magazine will soon welcome a kid sister across the river—Edible Manhattan launches in September (doesn't the good stuff always start here?) But Brooklyn will always be our first love. In fact can we meet up for a drink? How bout at our second annual swillfest, Brooklyn Uncorked—see you there on Wednesday, May 14th at BAM Café (p. 9).

While we revere the boro's legendary legacies, in this issue
folks who break new ground while breaking bread are breaking news.
